Die Bundesrechtsanwaltskammer ist die Dachorganisation der anwaltlichen Selbstverwaltung. Sie vertritt die Interessen der 28 Rechtsanwaltskammern und damit der gesamten Anwaltschaft der Bundesrepublik Deutschland mit rund 166.000 Rechtsanwältinnen und Rechtsanwälten gegenüber Behörden, Gerichten und Organisationen – auf nationaler, europäischer und internationaler Ebene.

Stellungnahme

Die Bundesrechtsanwaltskammer bedankt sich für die Möglichkeit, an der öffentlichen Konsultation der Europäischen Kommission zum geplanten jährlichen Bericht über die Rechtstaatlichkeit in der EU 2026 teilnehmen zu dürfen. Auf den Fragebogen der Konsultation, der nur in englischer Sprache verfügbar ist, antwortet sie auf Grundlage der Erfahrungen ihrer Expertinnen und Experten wie folgt:

2026 Rule of Law Report - targeted stakeholder consultation

Fields marked with * are mandatory.

Introduction

The annual Rule of Law Report lies at the centre of the Annual Rule of Law Cycle, which acts as a preventive tool, deepening multilateral dialogue and joint awareness of rule of law issues. So far, six editions of the Rule of Law Report have been published since 2020.

As every year, the Commission would like to invite the stakeholders to provide contributions to the 2026 Rule of Law Report. On the basis of these contributions and on-going developments, further targeted questions may be shared at a later stage of preparation of the 2026 Rule of Law Report, in particular in the context of country visits, or bilateral contacts.

The Commission invites stakeholders to provide contributions which include:

- (1) developments and measures taken in relation to the recommendations in the 2025 report,
- (2) developments related to topics covered in the 2025 country chapters, as well as any other new developments related to the rule of law.

The input should consist of a short summary, if possible in English, covering the areas referred to below. Legislation or other documents may be referenced with a link. Contributions should focus on significant developments since the last Rule of Law Report both as regards the legal framework and its implementation in practice.

This questionnaire also integrates the separate questionnaire on the single market from last year. In addition to these specific questions, respondents to the questionnaire are invited to consider the Single Market dimension, including any relevant cross-border issues, in all their answers.

Where questions of particular relevance under the single market dimension, this is indicated before the relevant question.

[1] Unless the information was already submitted in the input for the previous Rule of Law Reports.

Type of information to be included:

Under each of the four pillars, the replies should include references to the following types of information:

A) Legislative developments

- Newly adopted legislation
- legislative drafts currently discussed in Parliament
- legislative plans envisaged by the Government

B) Policy developments

- Implementation and enforcement of legislation
- evaluations, impact assessment, surveys
- white papers/strategies/actions plans/consultation processes
- follow-up to reports/recommendations of Council of Europe bodies or other international organisations
- important administrative measures
- generalised practices

C) Developments related to the judiciary / independent authorities

- important case law by national courts
- important decision/opinions from independent bodies/authorities
- state of play on terms, nominations and expired mandates for high-level positions (e.g. Supreme Court, Constitutional Court, Council for the Judiciary, Prosecutor General, heads of independent authorities included in the scope of the request for input[2])

D) Any other relevant developments

- National authorities are free to add any further information, which they deem relevant; however, this should be short and to the point.

Where relevant, please also indicate whether the developments reported are linked to the implementation of reforms and investments under the national Recovery Resilience Plan. To simplify your answers to the questionnaire, if there are no developments, it is sufficient to indicate this and the information covered in the contributions for the previous Rule of Law Reports does not need not be repeated.

[2] Such as: media regulatory authorities and bodies, national human rights institutions, equality bodies, ombudsman institutions, supreme audit institutions and, where they exist, transparency authorities.

Questions on horizontal developments

In this section, you are invited to provide information on general horizontal developments or trends, both positive and negative, covering all or several Member States. In particular, you could mention issues that are common to several Member States, as well as best practices identified in one Member State that could be replicated. Moreover, you could refer to your activities in the area of the four pillars and sub-topics (an overview of all sub-topics can be found below), and, if you represent a Network of national organisations, to the support you might have provided to one of your national members.

Questions for contribution

Under each pillar, you are invited to provide information on measures taken to implement the recommendations addressed to the Member State in the 2025 Rule of Law report, as well as developments with regard to the points raised in the respective country chapter of the 2025 Rule of Law Report and any other significant developments since January 2025 and up to the date of submission^[3]. Please always include a link to and reference relevant legislation/documents (in the national language and/or where available, in English). Significant developments can include challenges, positive developments and best practices, covering both legislative developments or implementation and practices.

Information provided in reply to the first question under each pillar, related to the follow-up to the recommendations, does not need to be repeated in subsequent parts of the questionnaire, but can be cross-referenced in the subsequent questions, where relevant. All other questions are not limited to the recommendations, but as in previous years, cover the entire scope of the Report.

^[3] Unless already covered in the input for the previous Rule of Law Reports.

I. Justice System

Please provide information on measures taken to follow-up on the recommendations received in the 2025 Report regarding the justice system (if applicable)

5000 character(s) maximum

Germany has a new federal government since May 6, 2025. Germany is currently governed by a coalition consisting of the CDU/CSU and the SPD, under the chancellorship of Friedrich Merz (CDU).

Dr. Stefanie Hubig (SPD) is the new Federal Minister of Justice and Consumer Protection. She has pushed forward many important legislative projects (Online Procedure Trial Act, StPO Reform Commission).

The BRAK warmly welcomes the approaching finalisation of the Council of Europe Convention for the Protection of the Profession of Lawyer. It is of crucial importance to coherently recognise and safeguard the fundamental role of the legal profession for the rule of law. The German Government signed the agreement in Strasbourg on January 26, 2026. To enable the German ratification, to bring the Convention into force and to ensure its success within the EU and beyond, it is of utmost importance to have a Council decision on the accession of the EU to the Convention. As already 8 months have passed since the opening for signature of the Convention, the BRAK is calling the Commission to present a proposal for the necessary Council decisions as soon as possible.

A. Independence

Appointment and selection of judges, prosecutors and court presidents (incl. judicial review)

5000 character(s) maximum

Independence/autonomy of the prosecution service

5000 character(s) maximum

Independence of the Bar (chamber/association of lawyers) and of lawyers

5000 character(s) maximum

One of the central characteristics of the legal profession is the professional obligation to maintain independence, as i. a. recently confirmed by the CJEU in the Halmer case (C-295/23). Independence is the only way to ensure that lawyers can fulfil their duties in the constitutional state on an equal footing with the judges and public prosecutors. Ensuring this independence of lawyers is one of the main tasks of the Bars as self-governing bodies with responsibility towards their members and any citizens seeking legal advice. A successful and efficient system of self-government of the legal profession is established in Germany, including the regional Bars and the Bar for lawyers at the German Federal Court of Justice, that are in charge of admission to the profession, the control of compliance with legal professional rules and regulations and enforcement decisions, as well as the German Federal Bar (Bundesrechtsanwaltskammer, BRAK), that represents interests of the regional Bars and thus of all approximately 166,500 German lawyers.

Another crucial issue for legal profession is the protection of the lawyer-client confidentiality as a core value of the legal profession and a precondition for the trust between lawyers and their clients and thus for their access to justice. In principle, this essential right of the client - and the respective right and obligation of the lawyer - is protected by various legislation, in particular regarding criminal procedure law. However, the protection offered by the law is spread through a high number of different codes and laws and in addition mostly focussed on criminal defense lawyers. Furthermore, confidentiality of the lawyer-client relationship has always been insufficiently protected particularly against search and seizure measures. This is i. a. demonstrated by an increasingly widespread practice of ordering the inspection of lawyer's correspondence by public prosecutor's offices. In addition, also on a European level it is aimed to increase the supervision on the legal profession, in particular in the field of anti-money laundering (cf. below). Similar threats to confidentiality may arise in tax matters, notably with regard to the German implementation of the DAC-6 Directive (cf. below). All such developments are to be strongly criticized.

Threats and aggression towards lawyers, which serve to intimidate them and interfere with their professional practice, are also a major cause for concern. Following the wave of threats this year and last year, which particularly targeted migration lawyers, we have been observing further verbal attacks on colleagues in social media with concern. For example, the German-born lawyer Chan-jo Jun, Chairman of the BRAK IT Law Committee, was recently attacked on various platforms with reference to his South Korean roots. The BRAK condemns this. More information: <https://www.brak.de/presse/presseerklaerungen/der-brak-2025/brak-verurteilt-verbale-attacken-auf-anwalt/>

As a recent survey of the BRAK shows, more than half of the participating lawyers (55.10 %) have been exposed to threatening behaviour, verbal or physical attacks at least once in the last two years in connection with their work as lawyers. According to the survey, most of the attacks were effected by (former) clients, the opposing party or persons related to them. Please find more details here: <https://www.brak.de/newsroom/news/europaweite-studie-anwaeltinnen-und-anwaelte-haeufig-wegen-ihres-berufs-bedroht/>

At its meeting on 19 September.2025 in Hannover, the 169th General Assembly of the German Federal Bar (Hauptversammlung) unanimously spoke out in favor of anchoring independent legal assistance in the German Constitution. It is enshrined in the constitution that all citizens are entitled to legal protection against state measures. The existence of an independent and self-governing legal profession, however, is laid down in the Federal Lawyers' Act (BRAO). It is precisely this provision in the BRAO that is the "crux of the matter", as it merely standardizes in a simple law that the legal profession is free from state influence and administers itself. This law could be undermined or abolished by a political force whose priority is not democracy and the rule of law with a simple majority in parliament and replaced, for example, by a system of completely state-controlled legal advice. An explicit provision - as with judges - is therefore absolutely essential in the Basic Law.

On 19 December 2025, the Bundesrat missed an opportunity to safeguard the rule of law and opposed this important demand: The majority of the Bundesrat does not want a right to independent legal advice in the German Constitution. It is now up to Parliament to deal with this issue. Further information here: <https://www.brak.de/presse/presseerklaerungen/der-brak-2025/wichtige-chance-vertan-bundesrat-will-recht-auf-anwaeltlichen-beistand-nicht-im-gg-verankern/>

Significant developments capable of affecting the perception that the general public has of the independence of the judiciary

The German judiciary continues to enjoy a high reputation among the public. It is regarded as independent, impartial and free of corruption. Regular surveys confirm this perception (e. g. World Justice Project; Rule of Law Index 2025; Germany ranks 6th in the world).

German judges are professional judges who rarely have an individual public profile. In Germany, the Second State Examination is the prerequisite for practicing as a judge. It is also the entry requirement for the German legal profession. While a number of younger practicing lawyers move from the legal profession to the bench after a few years of practice, there are hardly any such changes at a senior level.

In contrast to the selection of judges at the Federal Constitutional Court, political influence on the selection of civil judges is limited. Judges are promoted on the basis of their qualifications and track record (selection of the best). Promotion to supervising judge at a local court, presiding judge at a regional court, and judge at a higher regional court requires a trial period at the higher regional court. Many senior judges have also been seconded to a local or federal ministry of justice or to a federal state during their careers.

The German public does not see major problems regarding the independence of German judges, although there are repeated complaints about the length of proceedings and the number of civil cases is declining. The reasons for this are increasingly complex proceedings, sometimes excessively long pleadings by the parties involved, and problems associated with the transition to digital file systems. Excessively long proceedings and uncertain prospects of success prevent many citizens from taking disputes to court (see responses on page 13).

However, video hearings are making it increasingly easier to conduct proceedings before civil and specialized courts. The Act to Promote the use of video conferencing technology in Civil and Specialist Courts (Gesetz zur Förderung des Einsatzes von Videokonferenztechnik in der Zivilgerichtsbarkeit und den Fachgerichtsbarkeiten) was published in the Federal Law Gazette (Bundesgesetzblatt) on 18.07.2024. This is an important step towards digitalisation.

Besides, the BRAK calls for an audiovisual documentation of the main hearing in criminal cases (cf. below).

Until this is finally achieved, Germany continues to have a significant deficit regarding the rule of law in criminal proceedings that, in a longer perspective, might affect the perception of the public regarding the independence of the judiciary.

The Bundestag adopted the draft 'Act to strengthen Germany as a centre of justice by introducing commercial courts and English as a court language in civil jurisdiction' (Gesetz zur Stärkung des Justizstandortes Deutschland durch Einführung von Commercial Courts und der Gerichtssprache Englisch in der Zivilgerichtsbarkeit). The so-called Justice Location Strengthening Act (Justizstandort-Stärkungsgesetz) is intended to authorise the federal states to set up specialised adjudication chambers for commercial matters before which proceedings can be held in English. The German government hopes that this will strengthen Germany's position as a centre of justice in international competition and with private arbitration tribunals.

On 27 September 2024, the Federal Council (Bundesrat) adopted a resolution to strengthen the resilience of the Federal Constitutional Court (Resilienz des Bundesverfassungsgerichts) at the request of several federal states.

The resolution welcomes the proposal presented by the Federal Minister of Justice and various parliamentary groups in the Bundestag to expand the regulations on the Federal Constitutional Court enshrined in the Basic Law. This primarily concerns the status and organisation of the court, the term of office of its judges and the binding effect of its decisions. To date, these have only been regulated in the Federal Constitutional Court Act, which – unlike the Basic Law – can be amended as a simple law in parliament with a simple majority. The law has come into force in 2025.

The proposed constitutional amendments make an important contribution to ensuring the court's ability to function, independence and non-partisanship. For further information: <https://www.brak.de/presse/presseerklarungen/der-brak-2024/endlich-staerkung-des-bundesverfassungsgerichts/> In this regard, it should be underlined that the preservation of the rule of law entails enhancing the resilience of the legal profession as well (cf. above).

B. Quality of justice

(Under this topic, you are not required to give statistical information but should provide input on the type of information outlined in the introduction)

[single market relevance] Accessibility of courts (e.g. court/legal fees, legal aid, language)

5000 character(s) maximum

There is no general criticism of the quality of the justice beyond individual cases.

German court fees in civil and commercial matters are modest, they are calculated with reference to the amount in dispute and are capped at an amount in dispute of EUR 30 million.

Lawyers in civil litigation are still predominantly paid pursuant to the statutory fee schedule (Act on the Remuneration of Lawyers, RVG). Agreed legal fees in court proceedings may not undercut the statutory fee schedule. Nevertheless, alternative fee arrangements are permissible, and hourly billing is by no means uncommon. Commercial matters may serve as an example, as specialised litigation counsel typically charge for their services on an hourly basis, with the applicable rate being subject to negotiation between lawyer and client. However, irrespective of the agreed hourly rate, a prevailing party is only entitled to the reimbursement of the statutory legal fees for the matter. This rule manages the cost risks of the parties. In particular, a claimant can calculate the cost risk associated with filing a lawsuit. Such risk is capped to the court fees, the claimant's own lawyers' fees as well as the statutory lawyers' fees of the opposing party.

If a person requires legal representation in court proceedings, the plaintiff or the defendant may apply for legal aid. Section 114 of the Code of Civil Procedure (Zivilprozessordnung, ZPO) stipulates that parties who, due to their personal and economic circumstances, are unable to pay the costs of litigation, or are only able to pay them in part or only in instalments, will be granted assistance with the court costs upon filing a corresponding application, provided that the action they intend to bring or their defence has sufficient prospects of success and does not seem frivolous. Legal aid may also be granted to parties by virtue of their office as well as to legal persons or an organisation that has the capacity to be a party in legal proceedings pursuant to Section 116 ZPO. The decision to grant or refuse legal aid is taken by the judge who is responsible for the main proceedings.

Another form of financing court proceedings is legal expenses insurance. If the case has chances of success, statutory financing kicks in. In Germany, legal expenses insurance is quite popular currently and many legal actions are financed by insurance companies. The policyholder has a free choice of lawyer according to sections 127, 129 of the German Insurance Contract Act (VVG) in conjunction with section 3 (3) BRAO. This German system of ensuring free choice of lawyer has also found its expression in the corresponding provisions of the European Directive 2019/138. Third-party litigation funding is also increasing. While these mechanisms ease access to justice, it must be noted that for certain parties with sufficient funds of their own, but without insurance, bringing legal action can still be prohibitively costly.

In order to further strengthen access to justice, BRAK is advocating for regular increases in lawyers' fees. Lawyers are part of the rule of law. In this respect, an appropriate remuneration is important to ensure the provision of high-quality legal services.

The federal and state justice ministers met on 7 November 2025 for their seventh federal-state digital summit. The meeting focused on promoting the digitalization of the justice system as part of a new pact for the rule of law. The funding of digitization projects is to form one of three "pillars" of the new pact that the federal and state governments want to conclude. The federal government will provide budget funds of up to 70 million euros per year for this digital pillar from 2027 to 2029, i.e. up to 210 million euros in total, drawn from the "Special Infrastructure Fund". A joint declaration on the question of how the funds should be distributed was adopted by the ministers.

In June 2024, German authorities extradited a German citizen, the non-binary person Maja T., to Hungary, despite an emergency appeal, that was already submitted to the German constitutional court. This case proved the urgent need for a reform of the German IRG (act on international mutual assistance), since currently there are no legal remedies to ordinary courts available against such a decision, which also constitutes a violation of EU law. A first draft law was published in autumn, then it was dropped due to the government change. Currently a new draft law is being discussed. Regrettably, also this draft does not foresee sufficient remedies. Thus, the rule of law deficit is likely to persist.

Resources of the judiciary (human/financial/material), remuneration/bonuses/rewards for judges and prosecutors, including observed changes (significant and targeted increase or decrease over the past year)

(Material resources refer e.g. to court buildings and other facilities. Financial resources include salaries of staff in courts and prosecution offices.)

5000 character(s) maximum

In the past, the BRAK has repeatedly addressed political decision-makers with demands and position papers to maintain and promote the rule of law.

The demand that the judiciary should not only be adequately, but also optimally staffed and equipped, has been emphasized time and again. The preservation of a functioning rule of law depends on the ability of the judiciary to work, including in digital terms. It must be equipped with all the material, human and financial resources it needs to guarantee reliable and modern access to justice. In this regard, the processing of facts in online proceedings by the legal profession must also be guaranteed in order to maintain and strengthen the functionality and effectiveness of the judiciary.

The legal profession must also be in a position to continue to guarantee effective access to justice, while providing modern services in line with the desired equipment of the judiciary. In this context, attention must be paid to both the appropriate evolution of the lawyer's remuneration (cf. above) and the provision of sufficient legal aid (cf. above) for those seeking legal advice who are in need.

Noteworthy are a number of court rulings by administrative courts and state constitutional courts that criticize the level of judges' remuneration as unconstitutionally low.

[single market relevance] Training of justice professionals (including judges, prosecutors, lawyers, court staff, clerks/trainees)

5000 character(s) maximum

To be admitted as a Rechtsanwalt in Germany, one has to be qualified to become a judge in accordance with the German Judiciary Act (Deutsches Richtergesetz, DRiG). To obtain this qualification, it is necessary to first study law at a university and pass the First State Examination, then undergo practical legal training and finally pass the Second State Examination. The first examination comprises an elective subject from an academic priority area and a compulsory subject set by the state.

Pursuant to Section 43a (6) of the Federal Lawyers' Act (Bundesrechtsanwaltsordnung, BRAO) the lawyer is obliged to regularly pursue continuing training. Pursuant to Section 15 FAO (Fachanwaltsordnung) Bar-approved specialist lawyers are obliged to pursue continuous training in their field of expertise. Bar—approved specialist lawyers are obliged to provide proof of their continuous training vis-à-vis the Bars. Otherwise, they lose the right to call themselves a specialist lawyer.

Section 43f of the Federal Lawyers' Act will oblige lawyers to undergo mandatory training. Lawyers need to acquire knowledge of professional law in the future. In detail, Lawyers must pursue training in the amount of at least ten hours of professional law by the end of the first year of their admission at the latest. Training institutions such as Deutsches Anwaltsinstitut, Deutsche Anwaltsakademie und Deutsche Richterakademie and others provide training for justice professionals. To prepare law students in addition to their mandatory education at universities for the legal profession as well as professional law issues, the BRAK, the Hans Soldan Foundation, the DAV as well as the Deutsche Juristen-Fakultätentag are jointly supporting the Soldan Moot for thirteen years - a student competition on legal professional law, which is organized by the Institute for Procedural Law and Legal Profession at the University of Hanover. Furthermore, the BRAK is working together with schools in Berlin to familiarize pupils with the legal profession, its importance for the Rule of Law and the system of self-administration at an early stage.

Digitalisation (e.g. use of digital technology, including electronic communication and AI tools, within the justice system and with court users, procedural rules, access to judgments online)

The BRAK welcomes the discussions on the digitalisation of the judiciary in Germany and the willingness of all stakeholders to further advance the digitalisation (e.g. pact for digitalisation, Digitalpakt). BRAK demands better technical equipment and infrastructure throughout the country, the consistent implementation and further development of electronic legal transactions, the establishment of an e-justice portal and the use of digital litigation to improve the access to justice.

With regard to AI, at courts, AI tools are being used or tested for the automated anonymisation of judgments (cf. for example <https://www.baden-wuerttemberg.de/de/service/presse/pressemitteilung/pid/gemeinsames-ki-projekt-zur-anonymisierung-von-urteilen>), the analysis of large volumes of documents (e.g. FraUKe, OLGA and Codify) and the support in preparing of judgments (e. g. FraUKe, OLGA and Frida).

Law firms – especially larger ones – also use AI applications for document analysis, text preparation and research.

Nevertheless, the BRAK considers the use of AI replacing decision-making to be fundamentally excluded due to the judicial reservation (Richtervorbehalt) and the right to the lawful judge. This applies in particular in criminal and law enforcement proceedings. On the other hand, BRAK encourages the supportive use of AI, e. g. when it comes to the analysis of big data sets in particular circumstances, as long as fundamental principles and caution are observed. The BRAK has issued a guidance for lawyers' use of AI.

However, the BRAK particularly stresses that any risk of an automation-bias regarding the decision of the judge as well as the use of predictive policing measures, lie detectors or facial recognition tools in public spaces must remain excluded.

Unfortunately, the draft law on audiovisual documentation of the main hearing in criminal cases at the district courts and higher regional courts (Dokumentation der strafgerichtlichen Hauptverhandlung) felt victim to disconstitutionality. The issue is discussed again in the Commission which the next paragraph goes into detail about:

The Federal Minister of Justice and Consumer Protection has convened a commission of experts on the Code of Criminal Procedure. The BRAK is represented on this commission. The commission of experts is to develop proposals for the reform of criminal procedure by fall 2026. The commission's work will focus on the question of how main criminal trials can be conducted more quickly and efficiently - without compromising central procedural principles of the rule of law. For the BRAK, the focus is on ensuring that the rights of the defense are not affected by the reform. At this point, the BRAK also reiterates its support for the documentation of the main hearing.

If Germany continues to not having any recording of the content of main hearings (like witness statements, expert statements etc.), at the courts which are competent regarding severe cases, Germany continues to have a significant deficit regarding the rule of law in criminal proceedings.

As indicated above, video hearings will be easier to conduct in civil and specialist courts in the future, which fosters digitalisation.

The current status of the electronic file (eFile) in Germany is mixed: while Baden-Württemberg was the first federal state to complete the nationwide introduction in the justice system by 10 December 2025, many other states are lagging behind. In order to solve technical and organizational problems the initial legal deadline of 1 January 2026 has been extended by a year by the legislator (cf. <https://www.recht.bund.de/bgbl/1/2025/319/VO.html>). The federal and state governments are working on implementation, with progress being made by the federal administration, but major challenges remain.

The federal and state justice ministers met in Berlin on 7 November 2025 for their seventh federal-state digital summit. The meeting focused on promoting the digitalization of the justice system as part of a new pact for the rule of law. The funding of digitization projects is to form one of three “pillars” of the new pact for the rule of law that the federal and state governments want to conclude. The federal government will provide budget funds of up to 70 million euros per year for this digital pillar from 2027 to 2029, i.e. up to 210 million euros in total. These funds are to be drawn from the “Special Infrastructure Fund”. The meeting focused on the question of how the funds should be distributed. The ministers adopted a joint declaration on this.

Use of assessment tools and standards (e.g. ICT systems, including AI-based systems, for case management, court statistics and their transparency, monitoring, evaluation, surveys among court users or legal professionals)

Within the German court system, a tracking of cases takes place (in most Länder) to check the workload of the judges. A statistic with case numbers is published. There is, however, no quality or satisfaction evaluation of the German courts' performance. The German Federal Bar also does not do any such surveys.

The BRAK has a statutory task to provide for all the members of the Bars a secure electronic communication system for electronic legal transactions (besonderes elektronisches Anwaltspostfach, beA) and to maintain the necessary infrastructure. BRAK provides a secure access to e-justice-systems for all lawyers (identity provider). In Germany, the digitalization of the judiciary and the implementation of secured electronic communication in the field of justice are fairly advanced. Since the Act on the Promotion of Electronic Legal Transactions of 2013 (ERVGerFöG), electronic legal transactions in the field of justice and thus the digitalisation of the judiciary has become increasingly established. Since 1 January 2018, all lawyers have been obliged to receive electronic documents sent by other parties to the proceedings in electronic legal transactions, in particular the courts, in their special electronic mailbox (beA). The use of electronic legal transactions became mandatory as of 1

January 2022 for all professional participants in court proceedings.

Law firms have to decide for themselves how to make use of modern technology within their firms. Larger law firms are already well advanced in this respect. Digitalisation also takes place in smaller units or individual law firms. Work is becoming increasingly digital. Law firms also use standard software especially developed for law firms and online research tools.

German first instance court proceedings in civil and commercial matters at the district court level can be accomplished within a year. However, in many complex matters they take much longer, notably if the court appoints an expert. There is a general public sentiment that German civil courts are overworked and that therefore some cases take too long to be decided. Efforts are underway to strengthen the judiciary by increasing the number of judges and supporting the court administration.

German judges traditionally actively assist the parties in amicably settling their dispute. Accordingly, many cases are concluded not by a judgement, but by a pre-judgment settlement. Accordingly, statistics on the length of proceedings do not necessarily properly reflect the actual time span of a dispute from the commencement of the dispute until the judgment.

In the last ten years, German civil cases have decreased. In September 2020, the Federal Ministry of Justice commissioned a comprehensive research project to investigate the causes of the decline in the number of cases filed with the civil courts. The 400-page final report was published in April 2023. As expected, the number of new first-instance proceedings at the local and regional courts has been declining for years. From 2005 to 2019, the number of new cases at the local courts fell by around 36% and at the regional courts by around 21%. (cf. https://www.bmj.de/SharedDocs/Pressemitteilungen/DE/2023/0424_Abschlussbericht_Eingangszahlen_Zivilgerichte.html)

In the past, alternative dispute resolution was supported by the State with a view to relieving the courts of their caseload. Digitalisation should also help here and promote, for example, the increased use of video hearings in civil jurisdiction and in other specialized jurisdictions. The law came into force in 2024.

Following the ECJs ruling SpaceNet and Telekom Deutschland (C-793/19 und C-794/19) Germany has still not replaced its laws allowing for general and indiscriminate retention of data. A current draft law aims to introduce an obligatory general and indiscriminate retention of IP addresses and related data as well as retention orders and overly broad data uses for law enforcement purposes exceeding the limits established by the ECJ and the German Constitutional Court by far. A detailed BRAK position paper will be published, soon.

On federal level as well as in some Länder laws have proposed to allow AI-supported (in some cases real-time) facial recognition in public places and on the public internet. This raises serious concerns regarding the right to privacy core area of private life, including the possibility of seeking legal advice confidentially and anonymously. Not being able to do so and being analysed by (AI-)software would also affect the right to a fair trial (Art. 6 ECHR, Art.1, 2, 20 (3) GG) including the right to an effective defence (Art. 6 (3) c ECHR), the right to respect for private and family life (Art. 7 CFR, Art. 8 ECHR) and the right to the protection of personal data (Art. 8 CFR).

No legislation was passed to centralize the supervision of data protection and implement a more sectoral orientation of such supervision in general. At present, data protection supervision in Germany is essentially assigned (apart from only a few sectoral supervisory bodies) to 17 different Länder authorities and one federal authority. This leads to inconsistent legal interpretations and divergent supervisory practice. This also complicates data protection compliance in law firms.

Art. 16 of Directive (EU) 2024/1348 and Art. 21 of Directive (EU) 2024/1351 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 14 May 2024 provide for free legal information for applicants in asylum procedures. However, Section 12b (1) AsylG-E of the German government's draft of an Amendment Act (GEAS-Anpassungsgesetz) contains the provision that this legal advice is to be provided by the Federal Office for Migration and Refugees (BAMF) itself instead of independent advisors.

The transfer of legal advice for asylum applicants to the BAMF is from a rule of law perspective unacceptable as this means that the asylum authority advises on its own administrative act. The asylum authority would find itself in a conflict of interest and would also not fulfil the criteria developed by the Council of Europe for the quality and management of legal assistance. Legal advice must be provided by independent counsellors. These are lawyers and organisations that can provide qualified legal advice. The German Federal Bar (BRAK) has already positioned itself against this regulation in a letter to the Legal Affairs Committee and the Committee on Internal Affairs and Homeland Affairs of the German Bundestag dated 16 December 2024 as well as in BRAK Position Paper No. 80/2024 of October 2024 (https://www.brak.de/fileadmin/05_zur_rechtspolitik/stellungnahmen-pdf/stellungnahmen-deutschland/2024/stellungnahme-der-brak-2024-80.pdf). Despite the BRAK's criticism of this provision proposed by the previous German government, it has been adopted unchanged by the new government.

Under last government, the law to improve repatriation also introduced a regulation that ensures that people in custody pending deportation or custody to secure their departure will receive mandatory legal assistance in future. According to media reports, government circles have been considering abolishing this fundamentally important rule. It has now been reported in informed circles that concrete discussions on the abolition are to take place as early as next week.

The BRAK sees this as the abolition of constitutional principles. Compulsory legal representation in deportation detention matters is not about delaying repatriation, but about legal assistance with regard to detention as such. The BRAK strongly criticizes public statements by politicians that the abolition of "mandatory representation" is a reversal of ideology! Detention pending deportation must be kept separate from the asylum and residence procedure. Detention represents a massive encroachment on the fundamental rights of those affected and is not permissible in every case of a legally binding decision to leave the country. A reason for detention is absolutely necessary to justify detention that invades fundamental rights.

To describe mandatory legal representation in cases of detention pending deportation as ideology is not only questionable in the BRAK's opinion, but also completely incompatible with the rule of law. Detention pending deportation is a massive intrusion and intervention that requires legal advice. Unlawful detentions are anything but rare.

II. Anti-Corruption Framework

Please provide information on measures taken to follow-up on the recommendations received in the 2025 Report regarding the anti-corruption framework (if applicable):

5000 character(s) maximum

Preventing money laundering plays a crucial role in the fight against corruption. The non-financial sector is very complex. Unlike the financial sector it is not a standardised mass market. Its multitude of different industries and professional groups is subject to an equally diverse number of regulations.

The obligations to prevent money laundering also apply to the legal profession. In Germany, the regional Bars have been responsible for the supervision of lawyers in this area since 1 July 2017 and since the implementation of the (EU) Money Laundering Directive (EU) 2015/849. The Bars have formed a joint working group of the regional Bars to create a uniform understanding of risk and a uniform administrative practice, which provides a forum for an intensive exchange of information and experience. In addition to providing extensive information material and tools for persons subject to anti-money laundering (AML) requirements that are member of the respective Bar, the Bars have also developed joint audit programmes that include, among other things, record sheets for written audits to determine whether lawyers are, on the one hand, obligated parties within the meaning of the Money Laundering Directive and, on the other hand, whether they are fulfilling their AML obligations. The Bar's inspections also include on-site inspections at law firms and companies, as well as the imposition of sanctions for violations of AML obligations as a regulatory authority in accordance with Section 73b I BRAO.

In 2022, Section 177 para. 2 No. 8 BRAO came into force. It gives the BRAK additional competences in the area of AML. The BRAK has set up its own AML committee to support us in political decisions in the area of AML. The working group of the regional Bars will continue to be responsible for coordinating the daily supervisory tasks.

Immediately after the last Financial Action Task Force (FATF) Germany review in 2022, a working group of the federal chambers for the legal advisory professions has been set up, which meets regularly and exchanges information on questions of administrative practice, case law, interpretation and application notes on AML obligations and a common risk understanding for the inherent risks of these professions. The German Federal Bar (BRAK), the Federal Chamber of Tax Advisors (BStBK), the Federal Chamber of Notaries (BNotK), the Chamber of Public Accountants (WPK) and the Chamber of Patent Attorneys (PAK), among others, are participating in the working group.

The EU's oft-voiced criticism of lawyers' alleged lack of risk awareness and the fact that too few cases of suspected money laundering are reported is not correct: in recent years, the legal profession has significantly increased the number of reports it makes: while in the years up to 2020, there were still around 20 reports per year, according to 160 suspicious activity reports in 2023, according to the annual report of the German Financial Intelligence Unit (FIU), cf. https://www.zoll.de/DE/FIU/Aktuelles-FIU-Meldungen/2024/fiu_jahresbericht_2023.html. We have been informed by the FIU that in 2024, the number of reports increased again to 200. This puts Germany well above the European average. Risk awareness and understanding of the inherent risks in the legal profession has increased significantly since the last FATF Germany audit and since the regional Bars, as supervisory authorities, have been carrying out constant supervision and educational work since 2017. It should also be noted that, unlike tax advisors and auditors, not all lawyers are subject to AML requirements. According to statistical surveys, only 30-35% of the legal profession engages in the risk-increasing activities referred to in Article 2 of the aforementioned AML Directive.

Furthermore, it should be taken into account that in most cases, lawyers are only misused for money laundering at the third stage, namely to feed illegally acquired assets into the legal cycle. At this stage, the criminal origin of the funds is difficult to recognise because they have previously been channelled through the banking sector.

Furthermore, unlike for example tax advisors and auditors, lawyers might not have comprehensive insight into the origin of the funds, since it is not likely that the funds pass through lawyer escrow accounts. The low number of reports submitted by lawyers compared to those from the financial sector is due in particular to the fact that EU legislation itself provides for exceptions to the reporting obligation in certain cases. As lawyers are also subject to professional secrecy obligations under national law, they cannot file a report if there is no explicit reporting requirement because they are bound by confidentiality. It is therefore paradoxical to provide for far-reaching exceptions to the reporting requirement in order to comply with the right to a fair trial and at the same time to accuse the legal profession of filing relatively few reports.

German Act implementing DAC-6 – Dir. on mandatory automatic exchange of information in the field of taxation in relation to reportable cross-border arrangements.

The Directive imposes reporting obligations with regard to cross-border tax arrangements also on intermediaries. It provides for an exemption of the legal profession; the German Act implementing the Directive, however, does not. Thus, lawyers, insofar as they act as intermediaries, are subject to reporting obligations. Such gold-plating is per se not prohibited. The German implementing Act provides for the possibility to release the lawyer from professional secrecy obligations in accordance with Section 138 f of the German Fiscal Code (Abgabenordnung, AO). In this case, the lawyer has to report all the information listed in Section 138 f AO. However, where the client decides not to lift the obligation of secrecy, the lawyer still has to report some of the information and the client has to report the remainder, even if the client could be identified on the basis of the information that remains to be provided by the lawyer. Furthermore, the lawyer's professional secrecy obligations are also at risk in two other respects. The existing obligation for intermediaries to disclose cross-border tax arrangements in accordance with Section 138 d AO should also be extended to particular domestic tax arrangements. In addition, the introduction of mandatory invoicing in the B2B sector is being sought in the German implementing act. Here, too, the lawyer's professional secrecy obligations are at risk: according to Directive 2014/55/EU, an invoice must also include information on the recipient of the service - i.e. the client in the case of lawyers, as well as information on the service.

In 2 position papers on this issue, the BRAK criticizes the German legislator for not making use of the possibility of exemption as provided for in the Directive. The reporting obligations are contrary to the relationship of trust between the lawyer and the client, which is fundamental for the access to justice and a cornerstone of the lawyer's professional practice.

The CJEU has pointed out the fundamental importance of lawyers for the rule of law in several judgements (cf. C-623/22, C-694/20) on national transposition laws of the DAC-6 directive of other countries and annulled the respective provisions. This calls into questions the validity of the German law in this regard.

For some time now, the BRAK has become aware of a development that is highly questionable in terms of the rule of law: public prosecutors are increasingly ordering the inspection of privileged defence correspondence. Reports from colleagues show that various public prosecutor's offices are taking digital or paper correspondence between defendants and defense lawyers in order to view it in accordance with Section 110 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, even if clearly marked or recognizable as "defence counsel correspondence".

Both the order itself and the subsequent actual review are unacceptable – any privileged correspondence with defence counsel must not be subject to review by investigation authorities. In fact, it is protected by a ban on seizure under Section 97 (1) of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The BRAK is calling for an immediate end to this unlawful practice. According to reports, this phenomenon particularly affects matters relating to cum-ex cases or sanctions violations. This procedure constitutes an obvious violation of the freedom of seizure under Section 97 (1) No. 1 of the Code of Criminal Procedure and thus a central right of the accused. The freedom of seizure applies, also according to the established case law of the Federal Constitutional Court, to the seizure of documents in the custody of both the defense lawyer and the accused.

The German implementation of the e-evidence regulation raises some concerns regarding the implementation of the right of the defence to request such an order. The regulation refers to the national laws in this regard, presupposing the existence of such a right. The German draft bill on the other hand does not intend to introduce such a right beyond what is already provided for in national law, due to the prohibition of double regulation (Verbot der Doppelregelung). German law is very limited in this respect (no right in preliminary proceedings, discretionary decision by the public prosecutor's office discretion as to which evidence is collected, no judicial review of this of this decision). In the BRAK's opinion this goes against the regulation, which only intends to leave specific details to the national legislator. This violates the rights of the defence and is especially considering the principle of equality of arms unacceptable. Also in the context of transposition of the European investigation order directive such a right has not been introduced into German legislation. The latest draft also falls short in terms of legal remedies.

5000 character(s) maximum

Lawsuits (incl. SLAPPs - strategic lawsuits against public participation) and convictions against journalists (incl. defamation cases) and measures taken to safeguard against manifestly unfounded and abusive lawsuits

5000 character(s) maximum

With regard to the legal acts adopted in 2024, the BRAK, as a principle consideration, points out that sanctioning lawyers who act in lawsuits which qualify as SLAPP (as originally suggested in the European Commission's recommendation on SLAPP) raises serious constitutional concerns in Germany. The right to freely chose one's profession (Article 12 of the Basic Law) has a protective effect vis-à-vis rules which either relate directly to professional activity or which at least have an objective tendency to regulate the profession.

Every citizen has the right to legal assistance in court proceedings. Sanctioning lawyers in this regard would constitute a disproportionate limitation of this basic right and the access to justice. The result must never be that the decision if a lawsuit is considered as SLAPP or non-SLAPP is shifted to the legal advice area.

It also contravenes the basic principle of lawyer-client confidentiality which is based upon the client's trust in the lawyers' independence (cf. above). The independence of a lawyer requires independence in all directions and includes client independence as well as social and political independence – both, confidentiality as well as the lawyers' independence are guaranteed and protected by law in Germany.

Furthermore, SLAPP cases are of lesser relevance in Germany, since the losing party is legally obliged to reimburse the opposing party's litigation costs (limited, as mentioned before, to the applicable statutory fees). Moreover, German procedural law has, from the outset, recognised mechanisms allowing for the provisional termination of proceedings.

Nevertheless, Germany is in the process of implementing the Anti-SLAPP Directive, and the relevant implementing statute has already been promulgated in the Federal Law Gazette (Bundesgesetzblatt).

The German Federal Bar urgently calls for the separation of powers of the legislative, executive and judiciary to be preserved, even and especially in times of crisis, despite all the tension and existing special challenges. The principles of the rule of law must be observed, regardless of whether the country is witnessing a special situation or not. The crisis must not be the 'hour of the executive', even if quick action is required. Greater parliamentary participation in law making is imperative. Otherwise, the impression that will arise is that of the executive branch of government 'overrunning' the legislative and judicial branches. Each power is equally important and fulfils its specific role in a state governed by the rule of law. Anyone who threatens to upset this balance forfeits acceptance and trust in the rule of law.

Therefore, we would like to stress the following with regard to the elaboration of legislative proposals and the course of legislative procedures: Legislative acts must follow parliamentary procedure with all its deadlines and hearings in an orderly and unhurried manner. This is the only way to give all actors involved the opportunity to give the proposed acts sufficient thought. For this reason, the Joint Rules of Procedure of the Federal Ministries (Gemeinsame Geschäftsordnung der Bundesministerien, GGO) provide rules for deadlines and participation procedure within the federal government and participation by the Länder, local authority organisations, experts and associations.

In the past, we have criticized that feedback periods were too short.

Unfortunately, in many cases very short deadlines are now being set again. This is regrettable, as it does not guarantee an intensive investigation.

We have contacted the Federal Ministry of Justice and Consumer Protection and the Ministry of Finance directly in order to obtain longer deadlines in future.

Despite numerous calls in this regard, it has not been possible to establish an independent supervisory data protection authority at the legal profession's self-regulatory bodies as still no national legal basis for it has been created. Therefore, DPAs standing outside of the legal profession can still supervise and potentially interfere with the processing of client data – a core legal professional activity – thus conflicting with the institutional principles of independence and confidentiality of the legal profession.

Also, still no mitigating legislation has been initiated to at least implement the much-needed limitation of supervisory powers also for cases of Article 58 (1) (a) to (c) of the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) in addition to the limitations already provided for in Germany in Section 29 (3) of the Federal Data Protection Act (Bundesdatenschutzgesetz, BDSG). The BRAK is of the opinion that, notwithstanding the opening clause of Article 90 (1) of the GDPR, which is limited to cases of Article 58 (1) (d) and (e) of the GDPR, the national legislator is authorised to enact corresponding restrictions of powers, provided that this merely implements the principle of proportionality, which is also recognised under European law. Therefore, BRAK calls on the German government to promote the enactment of a corresponding provision and for further protection of lawyer-client confidentiality at EU level. To this end, BRAK calls on the federal government to advocate for an extension of the opening clause of Article 90 (1) of the GDPR to the cases of Article 58 (1) (a) to (c) of the GDPR.

Cross-pillar elements: cross-border rule of law issues related to the Single Market

If there are any significant challenges concerning the Single Market you have been facing in a cross-border context relating to any of the four pillars of the report, including for example issues with market access and the conditions for economic activities, that you would like to highlight, please do so here.

Given the cross-cutting nature of this question, it is included as a separate section in the questionnaire. Information collected under this question will however be integrated under the relevant existing pillar(s) of the Report.
